IMMI Announces Creation of More Than 100 Jobs

WESTFIELD, Ind., March 28, 2012 — IMMI, the industry leader, innovator and manufacturer of advanced safety systems around the world, announced today that it is hiring more than 100 people at its corporate headquarters in Westfield, Indiana. The majority of those jobs will be to support the increasing demand of lap and shoulder belts on school buses.

“More schools districts across the country recognize the need to take that next step in safety for kids, and now want their buses equipped with lap and shoulder belts,” said Larry Gray, IMMI CEO. “As research shows, more than 80 percent of parents want their children in lap and shoulder belts on buses. And, as the leading innovator in this industry, IMMI is growing to keep up with the demand.”

IMMI is hiring more than 65 people in various roles including: engineering, office support, and manufacturing. Additionally, the company is searching for college students or others interested in 50 temporary, two- to four-month summer positions.

“There are more than 100 engineers and developers working at IMMI every day to design, test, and manufacture the most innovative safety systems on the market. Now, we need more people to join us during this next, exciting chapter in our company’s growth,” Gray added.
